STROLLER: MACLAREN

Oh, Baby!

The Maclaren by Philippe Starck buggy is designed for urban parents traversing a concrete jungle with their little bundle of joy. The stroller easily folds down to a compact 8.5 inches by about three feet, making transport and storage a breeze. A five-point safety harness keeps junior locked in, and there's a matching changing bag for $125 finished in a stain-resistant fabric. Available in carbon, lemon, nectarine, and purple, exclusively through The Conran Shop or FAO Schwarz. $300. —JACQUELINE TSUI

POTTY TRAINER: BOON

Life of the Potty

Embarrassed by all the lame kids' stuff scattered around your chic pad? The design team at Boon is following up on the success of their Frog Pod (featured in the March 2006 Issue of DL) with a more sensitive bathroom challenge: toilet training. The Potty Bench integrates several useful features into one stylish product with enclosed side storage bins (and built-in toilet paper holder) helping parents organize training supplies, while its pull-out drawer makes clean-up both easy and sanitary. And, the soft deflector up front prevents a splashy mess. The only thing it's missing is a magazine rack. —PETER C. WOLF
